MARCUS JAHMAL

Marcus Jahmal grew up in Brooklyn's Prospect Heights neighborhood, with family roots in the West Indies and southern America. His artwork is inspired by photographs, ancient rituals, and personal memories. Moreover, Jahmal seamlessly synchronizes genres, painting still life, landscape, and portraiture. The self-taught painter develops his compositions directly upon the surface of each canvas and totes the line between reality and the imaginary, bringing such scenes to life. He explores the themes of dreams, whimsical Americana, and the realities of gentrification and life in the city.

PHYLLIS STEPHENS

What is your favorite family tradition? Likely, it's something you'll never grow weary of and are always excited to do. For Phyllis Stephens, her passion for traditional African quilt-making developed through her family, an art form that they've practiced for generations. With more than 40 years of experience, she creates rich, highly textured quilts that celebrate Black joy. She also reminisces and restores the cherished memories through her welcoming, storytelling quilts. Stephens' latest work, A Place to Rest, showcases her version of the moment of tranquility.
