his is Jahmal's second show with Almine Rech Gallery and the first in New York. Many of the new works here reference dice, cards and gambling, a reflection of the artist's upbringing in Prospect Heights where the Caribbean culture of the neighborhood had its fair share of illegal numbers and gambling. The paintings incorporate his memories of watching men roll dice in alleyways and illegal number sheets sold in bodegas. Images can come from a wide range of sources including photographs, family stories, personal memories and drawings.
